Paganism came to be equated by Christians with a sense of hedonism, representing those who are sensual, materialistic, self-indulgent, unconcerned with the future, and uninterested in more mainstream religions. Augustine argues.

Deane, Herbert A. Retrieved 25 March Other passages in the New Testament gospels reflect a similar observance of traditional Jewish piety such as fasting reverence for the Torah and observance of Jewish holy days. Or at least he seems to me to obscure some important distinctions between what would appear to be significantly different subtypes of Christ movements.
