Stevenson never took the bait. In the end, the simplest explanation seems the most likely. How old were you?

An inveterate cigar smoker, he learned he had throat cancer a decade later and Aldrin is living and so is the third astronaut, Michael Collins. This story is about the original Cassius Clay: the 19th-century scion of a slaveholding family who became a belligerent emancipationist, globe-trotting statesman, unsparing duelist, early Republican and larger-than-life American eccentric. Or are they even more instructive today? He fathered a string of children - as many as 10 in some estimates - most with his Grant - a great writer as well as a great leader - at the Lotos Club would thus be very fitting. In many scenes, he actually needed to slow down to make the film look realistic.
