For man there was an interposition of the most intimate kind. That is part of the ineradicable mental equipment of every human being, but he suppresses and distorts this knowledge. It is a common heading in the book of Genesis. We call the more biblical view realistic dualism. Man has an enlarged brain, and a reduced jaw and weaker teeth, fewer in number. Since Adam was the first man and thus the head of the whole human race, it is important that we know what Adam was like. Adam not only had a body, but he also had a soul. God has made us for himself and our fellow man. These verses are not intended to say that the spirit and soul are distinct components of the human on the same level of uniqueness as his physical body.
