To read Doing Psychoanalysis in Tehran is to enter a very personal world, Doing Psychoanalysis in Tehran (MIT Press) to encounter the intriguing vision of Gohar Homayounpour, psychoanalyst and professor of psychology at Shahid Beshesti University in Tehran. Then there is the part that has nothing to do with the difference in culture, but that has to do with my own ambivalence around around the analytic world, one where I threaten and promise to become a psychoanalyst one day, but hover around the edges, watching, but making no moves to ever quite take the plunge. ClinicalPsychology.She makes it clear that " if you are reading this book in order to satisfy your orientalist curiosities, I have to warn you: it will be a disappointing experience". Mostly in the analytic world, we write to each other, and reading this is like falling into home with a certain kind of language, theoretical worlds, way of practice and thinking.
